ON THE RIFTS.

Where the river from the shadow
Of the waving spruce creeps,
And then hurries through the meadow
Where the cascade broadly sweeps,
Where the trout his vigil keeps,
Where the trout his vigil keeps.

O what music, as we listen
To the river's splash and roar;
For the loveliest water glances
As they dash against the shore,
And the trees in the breeze
Heaven's music outward pour.

Many boulders rising yonder
With a beard of snowy foam,
Where the maddened waters thunder
Over the river monarch's home,
Where in pride he doth hide,
Where an angler dares to come.

Where the silver eddy sleeping,
Just beside the roaring flood,
Mark you how bravely leaping
From the tide in sportive mood,
And the mail sportive splash
Gives a start to laggard blood.

But I waste the time in thinking,
Morning clouds begin to lift,
At the fount of Nature drinking,
I forget the joyous rift.
Drop the reel, spring the reel,
Throw the fly with motion swift.

On the leaves of reflection
I have painted many scenes,
And I turn with affection
When life's work-day intervenes,
When the brain throbs with pain,
Then their sweets my fancy gleams.

Then, O heart, in rapture kneeling,
Lay this picture up in store,
Silver eddy and sun-shine stealing,
Sighing trees and river's roar;
Make it fast, that it last,
Till earth's ache and pain be o'er.

He Lives to Read Newspapers.

An interesting and curiosity-provoking visitor to the rooms is an elderly gentleman who walks with a limp and talks with a lisp. One cannot imagine of what country he is from his appearance or his speech, for he looks equally like Elihu B. Washburne and Peter the Great, and although speaking English perfectly does not betray the nationality of his singular accent on account of his over-length of tongue. While he talks to the long transplanted Americans, with whom he is on long familiar terms, he seems to be casually observing ear to be perpetually repeating the childish joke, "Thome perthouth alwayth intineth that I liph, but I never could perthieve it extiph when I ethay to thny, 'chucking thidder through a thraw!' The gentleman has never been in America, as he frequently observes, and as is evident by the questions he asks concerning the domestic habits of Americans. Yet he comes every day, day after day, and reads the United States journals as attentively as if he came only yesterday from Chicago. And not only does he read the leading New York papers, but also those from more distant States—California, and Louisiana. He seems to live only to read newspapers, and his appetite for them is omnivorous as that of any other habitué of the place, so that once in a season of horrible newspaper famine, when wild winds had lashed the Atlantic into such fury that no mail had come to land for many a day—I saw him sitting drooping in his accustomed place, reading gloomily on old copy of Frank Leslie's Young Ladies' Journal.—Paris Cor.

UPHILL WORK.—A Chicago correspondent says: I meet the directory canvasser in my rounds, and occasionally pluck a few interesting secrets out of him. A weary, wayworn wanderer he is at best, but this year he is full of unspeakable trouble. "It's tough work," he remarked, swabbing the perspiration from his brow; "tough, tough work to get people to give up anything," said he; "why, do you know there are whole rows of good families that try in every way to dodge away from us, and when they can't dodge as they go to the company and almost go on their knees to have their addresses kept out." "What's the object," quoth I. "Blest if I know," he said he, "but I can tell you that I have just been offered, right here on Ohio street, by a lady, a $10 bill to keep her husband's address out of the directory. Maybe the husband's in debt, or they're afraid of their granger cousins swarming in upon them at the conventions. Don't know, of course, all the reasons, but I know it's like drawing eye-teeth to get a name out of 'em. They make me feel like a personal-tax man. I've got to fish up neighbors all the time, and poke into family secrets like a detective."

Rev. W. H. Channing, of England, nephew of Dr. Channing, has been saying from the pulpit in St. Louis some things which his audience probably little relished. He deplored the American thirst for sudden gain; he regretted the superabundance of wit and humor in American newspapers; he mourned the snobbishness and exclusiveness to be found in some classes of American society, and he mentioned with pain the enfeebling corruption of American politics and the development of scepticism here.

A nervous Chicago man had a tooth pulled, and, as he came bounding out of the dentist's chair into a room where half a dozen other patients sat, he inspired them with terror by anxiously howling: "Am I all here? Will some one please take a census of me?"

A dead language—cold tongue.

An Emperor Who Would Have Dampings.

Ferdinand I. was from all accounts an amiable but weak-minded man, and took no interest whatever in the government, which was managed by the chief minister, the Prince Metetrich, the real monarch. An amusing anecdote was current of the Emperor, which his subjects took great delight in repeating. It appeared that His Majesty was hunting that summer in the Styrian mountains, and was overtaken by a violent thunderstorm. He took refuge in a farm house, whose occupants were just then at dinner. The Emperor's eye was caught by some smoking dumplings made of coarse flour, and he said he would like to taste them. The farmer's wife was overjoyed, and helped him plentifully. His chamberlains were astounded to see their master eating with more relish than he had ever done before. When he got back to Vienna he ordered the same kind of dumplings served up daily, to the horror of the royal cooks. The courtiers were scandalized at such a homely dish figuring on the menu, and even the physicians remonstrated against such coarse food. The Emperor, who had always been the most pliant of men, now showed that he had a will of his own, and persisted in gratifying his new fancy. Finally, after a long consultation, the physicians decided that it was dangerous to his health to be living on dumplings, and insisted on his giving them up. To their astonishment, the doleful monarch stamped his foot, and declared he would never sign another official document if this diet was denied him. "Emperor I am," he shouted, "and dumplings I will have!"

Another story going the rounds is worth repeating. A week or so previously a minister came to the Emperor's apartment, and begged permission to communicate a document before asking his signature. His Majesty sat down by the window, and the minister went on reading a very lengthy dispatch. At last he had done, and the Emperor inquired: "I have your Majesty," said the official, much flattered at the close attention paid to him.

"Well, then, I wish to inform you," replied the Emperor, "that whilst you have been reading, nearly two hours, no less than 435 hacks and 180 omnibuses have driven by the Hofburg."

The minister was quite crestfallen to find that the Emperor, instead of listening, had been busy counting the traffic passing the palace. Some people suspected his Majesty was a bit of a wag, and found of a practical joke at the expense of the sticklers for etiquette who surrounded him, and disturbed the gratification of his simple tastes.—Wykoff's Recollections.

HORSESHOES.—There has always been a peculiar significance attaching to the horseshoe. In olden days it was held to be of special service against the attacks of evil spirits. The virtue may have been assigned, perhaps, by the rule of contraries from it being a thing incompatible with the cloven-foot of the evil one, or from the dove resemblance which the horseshoe bears to the rays of glory, which in ancient pictures are made to surround the heads of saints and angels; or, finally, from some notion of its purity acquired through passing the fire. Up to the present time sailors are, for the most part, careful to have a horseshoe nailed to the mizzenmast or somewhere on deck near midships, for the protection of the vessel. The Chinese have their tombs built in the shape of a horseshoe, which custom is very curious, as it may be fairly regarded as a branch of the superstition long prevalent among ourselves.

STRANGE BIRTH MARK.—Gen. Steadman recently said that while he was in command at Chattanooga he was visited by Farson Brownlow, who became his guest. One day, while changing their underclothing, the parson exhibited to him a most singular birth-mark on his body. It was a perfectly formed snake, not coiled, nor yet extended, but curved as serpents are often seen. It was of a red color, and with every feature so distinct that the indentations for the eyes were plainly visible. Said the gentleman: "Physiologists, I presume, can readily explain the cause of the singular mark, but I am at loss to understand how his whole nature became so serpentine as it was. Venomous, vindictive and cunning, he had as much snake as human nature in his composition." The head of the snake in question was just under the parson's left breast. The body of the reptile extended down over his ribs, and was about six or eight inches long.

A woman at Allenville, Ark., conspired with a drug clerk to give her husband poison as though by mistake, instead of substance which he habitually bought. The plan was to let the man die, and then the widow was to sue the clerk's employer for damage.

Keep Your Mouth Shut.

The peculiar arrangement of the human vocal passages is specially suited to keep the air and to warm it before it issues the lungs. The foul air and odorous effluvia which one meets in a day's travel through the crowded city are treated with greater impunity through the nose than through the mouth, because the nostrils, though the mouth, business hours, coughs, etc.

The great actor Cooke, when dying, told his friends and faithful attendant, Broder, that, although he could make him no bequest in money, he would give him something worth money. He then advised Broder to set up as a teacher of elocution, and to impart to his pupils, on condition of a large fee, and a solemn promise not to divulge it, the secret of his (Cooke's) extraordinary powers of voice and its unflagging quality, which was to carry on respiration through the nostrils, so as not to dry or irritate the delicate organs of the voice. Broder took this advice, and used it so well as to retire with a fortune. He made every young clergyman, who took lessons, sign a bond that in the event of his becoming a bishop he would pay a further fee of one hundred guineas. John Thelwell inherited the secret from Broder, and used it with similar reserve and profit; but his son, on being appointed a college lecturer on public reading and speaking, disclosed the secret to all his pupils, as a thing of the greatest importance to them.

Mr. Pittman gives an epitome of the experience of George Catlin in his travels among the Indians, of whom he visited 160 tribes. Everywhere he found the Indian women careful to press together the lips of their children after leaving the breast, and before being suspended to their narrow cradles in the open air, and he found it to be a very rare thing to hear of a death during childhood among any of the tribes, before strong drinks and new diseases were introduced among them by the whites. It is said that no animal but man ever sleeps with his mouth open, and that the lungs need a degree of rest from labor which they get with the moderate inhalation that, with a low pulse, attends perfect nightly repose.

Mr. Catlin attributes his escape from malarial fever, and his actual recovery from pulmonary weakness, to a strict observance of the rule to keep the lips and teeth closely shut. When he went to the wilderness he was feeble. He found himself compelled to sleep in the open, airy air. His one main precaution secured the entire restoration of his health and vigor. He found that all Indians had good teeth, which remained sound to old age, and that there were no stutters among them.

In his closing paragraphs he advises mothers at home, and teachers in seminaries, should make nightly rounds as long as necessary to put a stop to the unnatural dangerous and disgusting habit of sleeping with the mouth open. "No one who has been snoring through the night feels properly refreshed in the morning. Keep your mouth shut, my young readers—when you read silently, when you write, when you listen, when you are in pain, when you are walking or riding, and by all means when you are angry."

Of the late Bishop Ames, the following anecdote is related: While presiding over a certain conference in the West, a member began a tirade against universities, education, etc., thanking God that he had never been corrupted by contact with a college. After proceeding thus for a few minutes, the bishop interrupted him with the question, "Do I understand that the brother thanks God for his ignorance?" "Well, yes," was the answer. "You can put it that way if you want to." "Well all I have to say," said the bishop, in his sweet, musical tones, "is that the brother has a great deal to thank God for."

When you take your next meal order tea instead of coffee, and in this way help to ease the pressure of tea that this country is at present suffering under. There are 10,000,000 pounds of last year's tea left over, and there are 34,000,000 pounds of Japan tea coming. When it arrives there will be more tea in this country than ever there was before, and millions of pounds more than are needed.

"Stonevall" Jackson was one of the most courteous men imaginable. His wife says, "He never passed a lady on the street, whether stranger or not, without raising his hat. One thing I remember of him, he never looked into a room that he happened to pass when the door was open—not even my own."

A dark hour in journalism—"Where is your other shirt?" she asked, in a tone of concern. "I have it on," he replied, calmly, and then he looked into his wife's face with a look of quiet endurance and went down to the office to get out the paper.—Hawkeye.

Love is to domestic life what butter is to bread; it possesses little nourishment in itself, but gives substance to a grand relish, without which they would swallow mighty hard.

Superficial men seek for beauty in a wife. It requires a man of good sense to fall in love with a plain woman.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C. May 31st, 1890.

The city is depopulated of politicians this morning, and interest centers in Convention reports, which are eagerly waited for by the friends of the various candidates. Congress has ceased to be the leading political attraction, and there are many doubts expressed as to the ability of those Congressmen who remain to do business for the want of a quorum. Not only Republicans have left for Chicago, but many Democrats have gone home to lay the vines for a renomination. But suppose there is a bare quorum left here, it will then be in the power of a few men to leave Congress without a quorum, and one man, if so disposed, can stop business by raising the question of "no quorum." At all events little will be done, either of business or mischief. Congress may as well adjourn this week, have a good rest, and when the Republicans return from Chicago, go at business with a vim, and adjourn by the 15th of June. Even adjournment on that day will be unusually early, for on Presidential years Congress usually remains in session until July or August.

On Friday the Senate took up Senator Eaton's bill providing for a commission to revise the tariff. This bill provides that a commission of citizens be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, who shall take the whole subject under consideration and report to Congress at the next session the result of their deliberations. Senator Thurman spoke in favor of the tariff bill, and offered it as a substitute. He seems to think that Congress ought not to give over the entire control of this matter to the President, but a commission of three Senators, three Representatives and five citizens should be appointed, the citizens by the President and the Congressmen and Senators by the two Houses. This plan gains in favor, and to-day the Senate will probably vote to adopt it. During the debate Senator Beck made a fierce speech in denunciation of all tariff bills, and drew a vivid picture of the ruin, which in his estimation, threaten the country on account of them. In the House, quite a contest was made over a Democratic amendment to the Sundry Civil bill, on Friday, appropriating $650,000 for the Marshals, with a proviso that none of the money should be paid for services rendered in enforcing election laws. The Republicans fought this attempt to nullify the election laws bravely, but were overpowered and the amendment was adopted. This appropriation is for services to be rendered after next July. No appropriation has yet been made for the year now ending.

Decoration Day was observed here on Saturday. The Departments were closed, and business suspended. The Soldiers' graves at Arlington and elsewhere were handsomely decorated by the Grand Army of the Republic, and also by our citizens.

THE NEVADA AND OREGON RAILROAD.—The Reno Journal says: Reno is to have a railroad north and another south, and work is to be commenced immediately. The road proposed is to be called the Nevada and Oregon Railroad, with headquarters at Reno. It is to run from Reno north to Modoc and Lassen counties, and up to the Oregon line, from Reno south direct to Aurora. If Mr. Don Barker were here surveying on the route north would commence at once. It will be commenced on his return, and the work of construction will follow the survey. The money is all ready, and Mr. Moore, of New Jersey, has been informed by telegraph that active work will be commenced at once. The Directors of the company are ex-Governor Woods, John T. Davis, Mr. McMecham, Mr. Moore, Colonel Ellis, T. Coffin and J. C. McFarlane. The last three named are residents of Nevada.

THE CANAL-BOAT DRIVER.—James A. Garfield was born in Orange, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, November 19, 1831. His parents were among those who emigrated to what was known as the reservation, and there took up land, which was then heavily timbered. The family was very poor, and labored hard to bring the property under cultivation. Before this was accomplished, the older Garfield died suddenly in the field, leaving the widow and son dependent upon their own resources. For a while young Garfield was engaged in the humble occupation of a canal-boat driver.

CHARACTER.—We do not believe there is a man in the United States more chagrined at the result of his candidacy than is Gen. Grant. He allowed himself to be flattered by Coulk, Cameron, & Co., and now he is chewing the end of disappointment. Had he withdrawn his name after one or two ballots had been taken at Chicago he would to-day be the most popular man in the United States, but as he did not he does not stand quite so high in the estimation of his party.

Early on Sunday morning about 1,000 feet of snow and 150 feet of wood-shed and 20 cords of wood were destroyed by fire at Coldestream, three miles west of Truckee. The Railroad is out of luck this year.

Commissioner Prescott left Washington on Monday for San Francisco, where he will meet Minister Angell and Commissioner Swift, and after a visit of two weeks, all three will sail for China.

A large fire occurred at Nevada City, on Saturday last, involving a loss of about $25,000. Chinatown was destroyed.

Good progress is being made at the Carson end of the Bodie Railroad.

THE NOMINATION.

The National Republican Convention on Tuesday last, on the 38th ballot, nominated General James A. Garfield, of Ohio, for President of the United States, and on Wednesday General Chester A. Arthur, of New York, was selected for Vice President. The nomination of General Garfield is a strong one and will bring to the Republican standard a united party, but it cannot be denied that the Republican masses desired, yet, demanded, the nomination of James G. Blaine, and for their disappointment they have to thank General Grant for allowing himself to be made a tool of by such men as Coulk, Logan, Cameron, and others of their kind, who would rule or ruin the party, to carry their ends. No man in the United States could enthrone the Republicans as can James G. Blaine—the second Henry Clay.

While regretting the defeat of Mr. Blaine the party is to be congratulated on the defeat of General Grant, which was accomplished by the friends of Blaine and Sherman throwing their votes for General Garfield. The nomination of Grant would have been fatal to the success of the Republican party, and the campaign would have been one of defense, instead of an aggressive one, on the part of the Republicans. General Garfield is one of the first men of our country. He was born in Orange, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, November 16, 1831, and graduated at Williams College, Massachusetts, in 1856, when he adopted the profession of the law. In 1859 and 60 he was in the Ohio Senate. In 1861 he entered the army as Colonel of the Forty-Second Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, having organized the regiment and equipped it at his own expense. On the day the battle of Middle Creek, Kentucky, was fought, in 1862, in which he took part, he was made a Brigadier-General. He subsequently served at Shiloh, Corinth and in Alabama, and early in 1863, he was appointed Chief of Staff to General Rosecrans, with whom he served up to the battle of Chickamauga. In 62 he was sent to Congress from Ohio, and was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. Before taking his seat in Congress he was appointed a Major-General of Volunteers for "gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Chickamauga, Georgia, from September 19, 1863." He was re-elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress, and served on the committee on Ways and Means, and on that of Postal Railroad to New York, and as chairman of a Bureau of Education; and also as Regent of the Smithsonian Institution. He was also a delegate to the "Loyalists' Convention" of 1866, and of the "Soldiers' Convention" held in Pittsburgh. He was re-elected to the Fortieth Congress, serving on old committees, and has been in Congress ever since. Last Fall he was elected U. S. Senator in place of Thurman, whose term will expire on the 4th of March next, but as he is to be our next President, another one—we hope he will be a Republican—will have to be elected to that position.

General Garfield is very popular with the soldiers—as much so, it is said, as Grant. He is tall, broad shouldered, powerfully built and fine looking man and is very popular where he is best known.

General Arthur, the candidate for Vice President, was Collector of the Port of New York, and is very popular in that State.

The Republicans have a splendid ticket to support, and so far as heard from the nomination of Garfield has been well received throughout the length and breadth of the land, and the Democracy will have to select their best man to cope with him.

SICK.—The Democrats are pretty sick over the nomination of Garfield. They had been led to believe by the bluster of the Grant organs that Grant would be nominated at Chicago on the first ballot, and counted on defeating him easily, but they find they will have to put up a mighty good man, and work like the old Harry, to beat General James A. Garfield.

The result of the Chicago Convention shows that matters not how much the people may honor one of their countrymen, they have not yet become man worshippers.

FIRST GUN.—Oregon has elected the entire Republican State ticket, and the Legislature is probably Republican. First gun for Garfield.

DON'T YOU.—Don't you wish you was an Ohio man?
